tis manifeſt that there is a motion of the heart and blood, and yet the reſpiration ſuppreſſed: Where he deſires it may be conſiderd withall, that the Lungs once inſpired doe more eaſily tranſmit the blood, than thoſe that never had any commerce with the Air; as alſo, that ſince part of the blood in a fœtus paſſeth through the Lungs collapſed, without reſpiration; all the blood may more eaſily paſs through the once inflated and expanded multitude of bladders, &c.

Errata in this Numb.

P. 665. l. 15. r. i o e; et. p. 670. l. 6. r. hath not taken. ibid. l. 12. r. as it ſhews. ibid. l. 34. r. permanent.

Imprimatur,

Julii 18. 1676.

JONAS MOORE,
Soc. Regiæ Vice-Præſes.

London, Printed for John Martyn, Printer to the Royal Society, at the Bell in St. Pauls Church-yard. 1676.